Personal Statement

I lie in bed, listening to the hallway for shuffling feet. Nothing. I duck beneath my blanket, switch on my Mickey Mouse flashlight, and pull out a Rubik's cube and a stopwatch. Beep – my fiery fingers grab the puzzle.

This is the eight-year-old me. When I was a kid, I wanted to be a Renaissance man. Never mind just picking law, medicine, or Norwegian Studies 101 – I wanted to do everything. Always hungry for more, I even taught myself to write ambidextrously and pick locks. Solving the Rubik's cube was my latest challenge.

Beep. 59 seconds! I throw the cube down in triumph. Confident, I was well on my way to become a jack-of-all-trades.

But I soon faced an obstacle greater than any before – the Snooze button. I don't know when the habit actually began, but it continues to this day. On far too many mornings, the button smashes my willpower in the microsecond battle between a mental sense of duty and nine more minutes of sleep. 6:00 AM, the pale blue clock reports. The Snooze button moans, "Press me. You know you want to. You need sleep."

Ironic, isn't it? I can write out the chemical structure of aspartic acid, and I can detail Nietzsche's philosophies of the genesis of good and evil, but I lose to a 4-inch slab of plastic. The perfect quality for a Renaissance man, indeed. As I try to write an essay that, according to my English teacher, is meant to "show off your stellar qualities," it seems odd that I want to reveal this embarrassing weakness. But to tell the truth, I actually began writing right after I was trapped in bed for what I thought would be a ten-minute nap. I knew right then that I needed to wage war against the Snooze button.

In the past, it's defeated me far too many times – like this summer's July 4th, when I almost missed the fireworks on the Boston Esplanade.

Or when I almost slept through the hiking trip to New Hampshire's White Mountains and had three angry friends rip my motel door from its hinges.

Or the time I made my parents late for our giant family dinner in Taiwan. My tiny cousins snickered, covering their mouths with the tablecloth, while my grandmother clicked her tongue like a disapproving hen. All right, so I had violated the divine honor of the family and the tenets of Confucius. I blame the Snooze button.

But there's still hope. Ever the inventor, I design prototypes – maybe an alarm clock wired to an electrical current. The next time I think about hitting the Snooze button, I instead receive a 120-watt dose of Edison's goodness. Maybe that's too painful. How about an alarm clock that explodes on contact? But the pragmatist in me surfaces, and I realize buying a new alarm clock every day probably wouldn't be very appealing.
